Lal Bahadur's childhood was spent in want and great poverty. He lost his father while he was just eighteen months old. His mother moved with him and his two sisters to her father's house seeking shelter. But to her bad luck, though her father was a compassionate man, he too passed away leaving the family in distress. However, her brothers looked after their sister and her children very well. Lal Bahadur's life, thus was not a bed of roses. Lal Bahadur started his school career in Mughalsarai where he spent eight years. He was known in the family as well as outside, Nanhe, meaning the little one. He was called by other name also — Gangaputra which meant son of the Ganga.

His school career was full of joy. His schoolmates were very friendly towards him. Nobody including elderly students did harass him any time. They were all together.
